Excerpt from The Construction With Iubeo: A Portion of a Dissertation Treating of the Construction, Presented to the Board of University Studies of the Johns Hopkins University for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy, 1898

The object of this investigation has been to ascertain the facts with regard to the mood of the clause depending upon iubeo, i.e., whether this is an infinitive with subject accusative, an infinitive with omitted subject (simple infinitive), a subjunctive with ut or ne, or a simple subjunctive, and the reasons, where there are any, for the use of the same. With this end in view, the works of a number of authors, representing different periods and different departments of literature have been examined and their usage given. In the case of the simple infinitive, the subjunctive with ut or ne, and the simple subjunctive, the results obtained by this examination have been stated both generally and specifically, that is, general observations, conclusions, and statistics are given, and then each authors use of the construction in question, together with quotations of the more important examples, critical and explanatory notes, etc. These details were not thought necessary in the case of the accusative and infinitive. Tables giving a comprehensive view of the range of each construction will be found on p. 41 ff.

Etymology of Iubeo. An etymology of iubeo which has found much favor is that which derives it from ius-habeo. So Breal and Bailly, Diet. Etymol. Lat. s. v. On trouve Iovbeatis dans le Senatus-consulte des Bacchanals. Nous en pouvons conclure que la premiere syllable etait longue a l'origine.
